

CREATING SOLUTIONS TO END YOUTH HOMELESSNESS: Federal Policy Campaign to House 50,000 Homeless Youth

Based on research, it is conservatively estimated that over 50,000 youth sleep on the streets in the United States for six months or more. Youth are displaced from their homes due to family breakdown and system failure. Survival on the streets exposes youth to acute diseases, addiction, physical assault, unwanted pregnancy, unmitigated mental illness, sexual abuse, HIV, rape and suicide. Neither the market nor existing federal housing programs have solved this problem, but solutions and targeted interventions are available.

The National Alliance to End Homelessness proposes a new federal youth housing campaign to target funding and interventions in youth housing programs to better meet the unique, developmental needs of unaccompanied, homeless youth. While 50,000 homeless youth is a national crisis and disgrace, it is not so large that decisive action by Congress and the Administration could not end street homelessness among America's youth. A federal youth housing initiative would build on existing models but require coordination between the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to target investments toward youth-focused housing programs. Community-based organizations funded by HHS programs made over 740,000 youth contacts through street outreach in 2008 but served less than 43,000 youth with emergency shelter assistance and less than 4,000 youth through transitional housing. Over 7,400 youth were turned away for lack of available beds. Ending youth homelessness requires services to reconnect youth with their families or access to housing opportunities tied to supportive services.

A NEW FEDERAL POLICY APPROACH TO ENDING STREET HOMELESSNESS FOR YOUTH

Unaccompanied, homeless youth are a distinct, special needs population requiring access to independent, affordable housing to avoid exploitation. This will only come about if HUD and HHS coordinate to establish a spectrum of housing programs for diverse subpopulations of homeless youth. All youth housing programs must provide permanency and positive youth development.

YOUTH HOUSING BASED ON TARGETS TO DISTINCT TYPOLOGIES:

Not all homeless youth share similar circumstances, family background, or need for supportive services. The following is a simple typological list of various subcategories of homeless youth that would be best served with a variety of housing models and different levels of services.

- Young Teenage, Early Runners – displaced from their homes due to severe conflict, abuse, or neglect, and experiencing short-term homelessness
- Doubled-Up Transitioning Age Youth – who cannot return home and require housing with life skills training
- Older, Employed Homeless Youth – highly mobile and homeless youth who have access to part- or full-time employment but lack access to affordable housing opportunities
- Street Dependent Youth – sleeping outside, in public spaces, or in abandoned buildings for six months or more and in need of services to facilitate social inclusion
- Homeless Youth with Long-Term Disabilities – youth experiencing cognitive or mental health disabilities that will require support into their adult years

Other subcategories of homeless youth that may be identified and present in the above groupings include:

- Sexually exploited youth
- Former juvenile justice or foster care youth
- Pregnant and parenting youth
- Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender or Questioning (LGBTQ) youth
- Undocumented youth
- Youth of color
- Victims of physical or sexual abuse or chronic neglect
- Youth recruited into sexual exploitation or trafficking
- Youth abusing or addicted to alcohol or drugs
